RECIPE: Keeping public computers healthy with lockdown software

"Lockdown software has decreased my workload considerably. The computers that have lockdown software—I basically just check them for updates. We don't have the software on all of our computers because they're older and don't have enough memory. On the older computers, a lot of people are going in and changing settings, changing the screen savers, changing the font type, deleting icons—just minor things, actually, but it takes a while to get the system back to where it should be."
